Description:

His straight shoulder-length hair is copper-gold, his eyes have yellow pupils slitted like cats' eyes, his lips are full and he has clawed fingertips. Even his toes are clawed. He has copper scales across the top of his forehead, down around both his ears and down the back of his neck. His body temperature is up a few degrees.

Devis doesn't fully appreciate the effect of his enhanced appearance and personal charisma - think a reddish gold Mick Jagger in studded leather. Some people just can't keep their hands off of him.

Devis has a magical tattoo - "GI" on his left butt cheek and "NI" on his right - encircled artistically and in a large heart shape by tiny flowers, hearts and vine leaves. The whole thing covers his butt from the small of his back to the top of the back of his legs, and from hip around to opposite hip at the widest curve of the heart shape. A point of trivia about elves - they're hairless except for eyebrows, eyelashes and the top of their heads - no other body hair. Devis takes after his mother's side of the family in this respect - Gini had a smooth, hairless canvas to work on.

Biography:

Although he generally behaves and reacts like a human, Devis grew up with elves. His elven mother was cold, distant and uninvolved in Devis' life, but exceptionally beautiful and made music to move the soul. The two things that can easily be considered Devis' fatal flaws - great beauty and great music. There probably isn't anything he wouldn't do to possess either. Becoming a bard was a natural progression.

As a half-elf in an elven community he was always on the edge of things - didn't quite fit in with the others. His mother considered him the inconvenient consequence of a moment of passion. However, she believed in taking responsibility for her actions and raised Devis as her own. In this she considers herself better than his wandering human father. Adventurers!

Devis didn't fare any better with his first love - not unrequited, but an elven royal heir was an unwise choice for a bastard half-elf. Like I said - great beauty and great music will get Devis every time. Shandell possessed both. To Devis' delight Shandell responded in kind, but neither could withstand the combined censure of the rest of the community. A long, sensuous summer became a nightmare of public restraint and carefully planned secret meetings that kept them both on a knife edge. Devis couldn't stand it any longer and left, none too gracefully, to pursue life on his own terms.

An over-confident young half-elf with a broken heart makes mistakes, and Devis made a biggie not long after leaving his homeland. Travelling alone in dangerous territory, Devis was captured by a small band of orcs. They liked him so much they shared him around for three days before Shandell, hot on Devis' trail with an elven war band, tracked him down. Nothing like an enraged elven paladin with company to brighten up an orc's day.

Shandell's reputation as a scourge of the orcs was made that afternoon, as six orc skins were pegged out on the ground. All that Devis remembers is that it was Shandell that found him - naked, filthy, badly abused and injured, tied up and just barely alive. Devis managed (just - but I think he's kidding himself) to deal with events, but he could never reconcile the ugly expression on Shandell's beautiful face with any future together. After that it really was over as far as Devis was concerned.

Shandell took Devis back to their secret place in the elven woods. After several weeks here recovering some measure of sanity, Devis convinced himself that Shandell couldn't bare to touch him. Had Devis but asked he would have learned differently. Elves understand suffering - it finds expression in the poignancy of their music, music that entrances, heals and strengthens the listener. Shandell was giving Devis space and time in which to heal. Devis, accustomed already to too much space in his relationships with elves, misinterpreted this and chose again to leave, again without discussing it with Shandell. This time, wisely, Devis left in the company of other elves.

Devis' travels took him to Greyhawk - safety in numbers. The rest - as they say - is history.
